The local markets of the morning presented a bright and wholesome appearance, and from a casual glance at the fruit and vegetable stalls it would seem that the rain of last night, though brief, was just what the farmers Huckleberries made their initial bow for 1903 to the Washington public this morning, and found ready sale at 25 cents a quart. Cherries, too, were to be had in quantities, both the dark red and white varieties for 20 cents a quart. Peaches made their appearance from North Carolina and are selling at 10 cents a quart box, forcing the Florida product off the barket. The long dry spell, however, has caused a scarcity of strawberries, and prices jumped this morning from 10 and 121/2 cents a guart to 15 and 20 cents. Unless a good hard rain sets in soon it is predicted that the strawberry sea-Florida watermelons have dropped in price from $1 to 75 cents apiece, but are still too much of a delicacy for the average housekeeper. Branch beets were also new on the market this morning, and sold readily at 10 cents a bunch, or three bunches for 25 cents. New peas average about 45 cents a peck. Eggs, butter and chese remain the same.
